MY IWO JIMA SAGA is the just-published, first-hand account by the commander of E/2/28 that raised two American flags atop Mount Suribachi during the World War II battle in February 1945 — a bloody campaign that was immortalized in the Pulitzer Prize-winning photograph by Joe Rosenthal that helped inspire a war-weary nation to victory.

Col. Dave E. Severance, USMC (Retired), spent subsequent years of his life preserving and defending the truth about that seminal battle against those who would fabricate and perpetuate their own made-up roles in being a part of its history. Erroneous claims would find their way into the media or prompt inquirying family descendants to reach out in search of more information, only to be disappointed to learn that their family member did not tell the truth and, for whatever reason, felt the need to weave a tale for their own glorification — or at least in the minds of their families. Severance did not ask for, nor want, that burden, but felt a deep sense of obligation to protect and defend his men and their true role in history — especially those who made the ultimate sacrifice.

Before he died on Aug. 2, 2021, at age 102, Severance entrusted the draft of his remembrances of the historic flag-raisings and his documentation of the numerous false claims he refuted to Tales Press for future publication.

IWO BLASTED AGAIN

By Ray Elliott

Iwo Jima Marine veteran Jack Britton has carried the horror of combat and the loss of his young wife and his buddies with him for the past 60 years. Now, in the last 36 hours of his life in a hospital intensive care unit, he revisits those aspects of his life and grapples with his long-suffering questions about fate and self-doubt through a psychological phenomenon known as sundown syndrome.

WILD HANDS TOWARD THE SKY

By Ray Elliott

Young John Walter has no memories of his father, who was killed on Guadalcanal during World War II. But he is inescapably drawn to the other men in his rural hometown who served in the war and returned, especially his older cousin, Sam, who was injured during the D-Day invasion. Out of their own respect for his father, they seem compelled to teach John Walter their hard-earned lessons about life, responsibility, duty and honor.

BAIT

By Donald E. Stephen

A Vietnam War memoir by Martinsville, Ill., farmer Donald E. Stephen who served in Vietnam as an Army infantry platoon leader in 1970-71. Stephen, a Special Forces-trained officer, went to Vietnam as a 24-year-old soldier and led men barely out of high school through days of prolonged fighting and uncertainty in the jungles of Vietnam.

WITH THE SILENT KNOWLEDGE By Ray Elliott

Michael Callahan is a smart, talented man from a privileged upbringing who's also an alcoholic and his own worst enemy who winds up in a maximum-security prison to fend for himself in a hard environment that doesn't do much to help non-violent offenders break their self-destructive behaviors. But that doesn't mean he won't try to outsmart and outlast the conditions that only beat him down before he can try to make parole.
